

Amy Vidali received her Ph.D. in English from the University of Washington. She also has an M. A. from the same university in English to Speakers of Other Languages, and a B.A. (summa cum laude) from UC Berkeley. She was an Associate Professor in English at the University of Colorado, Denver (since 2014), where she began as an Assistant Professor in 2006, when she concurrently served as Director of Composition. Vidali's areas of research are in rhetoric, composition, and disability studies. She is also well-versed in the strategies of instructional technology and program assessment. From her award-winning article "Disabling Writing Program Administration" to her publications in top-tier journals in the field (JAC, Rhetoric Review, College English) to her many conference presentations and invited talks, Dr. Vidali has a demonstrated ability to produce research that contributes to the field of Writing Studies and to diversity efforts in higher education.
